

The Daniel K. Inouye Asia-Pacific Center for Security Studies is a Department of Defense academic institution that provides a forum for military and civilian leaders from 45 Indo-Asia-Pacific nations to gather and foster improved multinational and interagency security cooperation and coordination in the Indo-Asia-Pacific through focused executive education, leader development, regional outreach at workshops and engagements, professional exchanges at conferences, and policy-relevant research. The Daniel K. Inouye Asia-Pacific Center for Security Studies is located in Honolulu, Hawaii.

The Center invites applications for:

FACULTY MEMBER

The College of Security Studies is searching for a world class educator to teach, facilitate, and conduct research. Faculty position is responsible to:

- Teach and lecture on selected regional security topics within executive education courses;
- Facilitate seminars and group events;
- Plan and conduct workshops locally and throughout the Indo-Asia-Pacific;
- Contribute to curriculum development;
- Perform various administrative and staff duties to support the Daniel K. Inouye Asia-Pacific Center mission and academic functions.

Particular expertise is sought in the following areas:

- International Security, with a distinct focus on the knowledge and practice associated with major geopolitical issues, regional dynamics, and contemporary trends in conventional and non-conventional areas of security in the Indo-Asia Pacific.

Required minimum qualifications include:

- Master's Degree in Area Studies, Security Studies, Political Science, International Relations, Economics, Anthropology, History, or a related discipline with extensive practitioner experience in the region. A Ph.D. is desirable, but not required.
- Proven ability to teach and facilitate seminars.

The following is "preferred" for ALL faculty positions:

- Expertise in security, defense, and/or political-economic issues in one or more Indo-Asia-Pacific countries.
- Experience living or working in the Indo-Asia-Pacific.
- Ability to converse in an Asian language.

Salary and rank are commensurate with qualifications. Salary range is $83,548-$135,000 (includes HI Locality pay but excludes cost of living allowance (COLA), currently 12.05% but subject to change). These are limited-term, excepted-service positions, for up to three years (with the possibility of renewal). Required start date is July 2017. Relocation expenses may be authorized.
